Course Objectives

“Our lives are shaped by those cold monsters, the states.” –Stanley Hoffman

“What made war inevitable was the growth of Athenian power and the fear which this caused in Sparta.” –Thucydides

This course surveys major topics, theories and approaches central to the academic field of International Relations (IR). It’s about the big questions, and it addresses two levels of enquiry: what is the nature of world politics and how scholars attempt to understand that phenomenon. We will focus on the historical origins of our modern international system, major theories or paradigms of IR, and major areas of interest. These substantive areas include war, foreign policy, and global governance. In these areas, scholars fiercely debate fundamental principles, conceptual models, and causal relationships because the stakes remain high, even perilous. The fates of individuals, states and the international system rest on how such issues are addressed by citizens and policy makers. Students are expected to critically engage these questions by remaining current with the assigned readings and actively participating. As a seminar, the course focuses upon student discussion with a specific concern for critically analyzing both the substance and the method of a given work. The seminar concludes with a major writing project. Our goals are to leave with 1) a more profound understanding of world affairs, 2) an ability to concisely analyze complex issues and arguments, and 3) methodological tools to evaluate and generate international relations research.

- KEEP THIS SYLLABUS -
  you will need it for MA comps

Student Learning Outcomes

- Students will evaluate and critically engage competing, sometimes contradictory, theories and explanations of international relations.
- Students will engage a major research topic, evaluate existing literature on that topic, develop testable hypotheses and execute a comparative case study.
- Students will practice and refine deliberative skills among their peers and be challenged to articulate and defend considered positions on contested topics.
- Students will assimilate complex material and distill it to fundamental principles and assumptions.

Topics

- IR as a social science: its theoretical underpinnings and goals.
- The origins and development of the modern states system and how the constraints and incentives of that system shape international relations.
- Major theories of IR: their uses, abuses, strengths and weaknesses.
- The roles of coercion and violence in international affairs.
- The formulators and drivers of foreign policy.
- Whether and how governance is possible among states.
- Plausible future trajectories for international politics and the international system.
Course Materials
Required
- Assortment of articles made available in PDF format on eLearning>Content.

Recommended
- Lange, Matthew (2013) Comparative Historical Methods SAGE. 978-1849206280
- For more suggested readings related to each course topic, see the document “More Resources and Further Reading.”

Course Requirements
The final grade is based upon participation (30%), current events memos (10%), a mid-term literature review (20%) and a final project (40%).

Participation
Seminars are a round-table approach to class time. In order to participate in the discussion, you will be responsible for each week’s readings. In other words, I do little lecturing: class time relies on student participation. If you are too shy, get over it. If you are too talkative, you are offering ever more rope to hang yourself.

Weekly News/Current Events
On an assigned week, you will be responsible for circulating and presenting a one-page overview of the week’s news. We will discuss how these are relevant to larger course themes and/or other issues. Treat it as a professional—yet academically-informed—summary for an employer. There are two basic requirements: 1) send me your paper no later than two hours ahead of class OR bring a hard copy for everyone; 2) presentations should be about five minutes with general class discussion to follow.

I will assign you a day to present within the first week. Note: depending upon class size, two people may need to present during one week. In that situation, divide the week’s stories.

Literature Review
This will be 6-10 pages and should include at least ten scholarly or similar sources (see overview on eLearning). Use this to begin exploring and developing the topic for your final paper.

See the short article “Knopf – Doing a Literature Review, 2006” for details on this type of writing. You will find it eLearning. Please consult me, though, if you are struggling with how to approach this paper.
Final Project The final project will either be a traditional social science research paper or a broad literature review and analysis of IR with a focus on whatever area you choose. In other words, if you are thinking about a thesis for your MA, the research project is recommended. If you are looking at comps, the literature review will be helpful. This will be NO MORE than 30 pages; however, I am more focused on quality than quantity. Details on these options appear on the syllabus’ final page.

GRADING In general, I consider how well you followed directions and focused tightly on your given topic; your mastery (i.e. correct understanding and general use) of the readings and other course material; your argument’s clarity, consistency and accuracy; overall structure and logic; overall clarity and grammar.

Academic Conduct

PLAGIARISM and ACADEMIC DISHONESTY involve adding others’ words to your text as if they were your own and will not be tolerated. For University policies on plagiarism and other misconduct, see the Student Code of Conduct: http://uwf.edu/osrr/documents/BOTApprovedStudentCodeofConduct-2010edition.pdf.

Assistance for Students with Special Needs

If there are aspects of the instruction or design of this course that hinder your full participation, such as time-limited exams, inaccessible web content, or the use of non-captioned videos and podcasts, reasonable accommodations can be arranged. Prior to receiving accommodations, you must register with the Student Disability Resource Center (SDRC) at http://uwf.edu/sdrc/internal/, which requires documented needs of the individual. For information, e-mail sdrc@uwf.edu or call 850.474.2387.
Course Schedule

- Readings not in assigned texts will appear in PDF form in eLearning > Course Materials > Content
- Some dates and assignments may be changed. I will announce these by email and in class.

Final Paper Instructions

Treat your final project as a professional paper or publication similar to what we have been reading all semester. Papers must be fewer than 30 pages, but I will be focusing more on quality than page length.

Grading standards are detailed in the document “Shively Paper Grading Rubric” on eLearning.

Choose ONE:
- Traditional social science research paper. You will be seeking to answer a question, evaluate a case or test a theory/hypothesis. This is a good option for those contemplating an MA thesis.
  - If unsure how to proceed, use one of the case study approaches outlined in the George and Bennett (2005) or Lange (2013) selections. The authors cover several approaches, so consult with me as you are making your decision.
    - Your final product should include a clear thesis, a short review of relevant literature, the case study itself and findings along with conclusions/implications.
  - You may choose any topic related to material covered in this course.
  - Papers oriented toward political philosophy might utilize a slightly different format. See me to discuss this option.

- Broad literature review and analysis of IR with a focus on an area of your choosing. You will canvass the discipline and evaluate key debates as they relate to your chosen topic. This is a good option for those contemplating comprehensive exams.
  - Your goal is to evaluate the strengths and weaknesses of the field as it relates to your topic.
    - You may choose any topic related to material covered in this course.
  - At the end, you must also include a possible research project that would address/answer a key question that has arisen in your literature review. Use the George and Bennett (2005) book assigned for this course to find a template to follow.

Other Requirements:

1) Sources: Legitimate sources include scholarly works, government documents, official statements or testimonies, reports from credible think tanks or NGOs, or long-form journalism. You might start reading for your research with sources like Wikipedia, but do not quote or cite them. Feel free to contact me at any time regarding sources.

No minimum number of sources is required, but a good works cited is always longer than one page.

2) Formatting: 12-point Times New Roman OR 11-point Calibri font. 1 inch margins. You may choose your citation style (such as APA or Chicago), but you must use that style consistently throughout. To cite a document retrieved online, use a standard format, DO NOT simply copy and paste the browser link.

Late papers will lose 5 points immediately and 5 more for each subsequent 24 hours.
